Be Careful What you Put Out There: Twitter, Facebook, and MySpace
Advertising and Your Own Public Relations

Social networking is a tool for personal development and not just for fun. Learn to use the new social media as tools for learning, job search, career planning, and building knowledge. Look at careers in advertising and public relations, being an agent, and other roles that require analytical skills, communication skills, poise, and interpersonal leadership skills.

“My reputation is my most valued asset and I will not put something out there on the Internet that is personal and harmful to my name, family, or community.”
